POPULATION : UNITED STATES

NUMBER OF INHABITANTS, BY COUNTIES AND MINOR CIVIL DIVISIONS

Presented with the approval of the U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

This bulletin gives the population of states and territories, by counties and minor civil divisions, as enumerated at the Thirteenth Census, taken on April 15, 1900, with comparative statements of the population of 1850 and 1880 when possible. In many of the states, particularly in those of the western part of the country, there have been in the last 20 years a number of changes in the boundaries of counties as well as in the minor civil divisions which sometimes differ in comparison with the preceding census enumeration on account of the question.

The statistics are here given in two general tables for each state of continental United States and for the outlying territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico. The statistics for any given state or territory are thus brought together in one place.

Table 1 shows the population of each state or territory, distributed according to counties and minor civil divisions, at the last three Federal censuses, namely, those of 1900, 1880, and 1850. The arrangement of counties is alphabetical and the same order is followed for primary divisions, except where they are known by numbers only, in which case the numerical order is followed. The changes in boundaries, name, or form of organization which have taken place since 1880 are indicated in the footnotes to the table.

Table 2 shows for each state or territory the cities and other places as alphabetically arranged in 1900, 1880, and 1850. The population of each place is given, and the number of counties in which it is situated. In the United States are, in general, two classes of cities: those which are incorporated into political divisions known as counties, and those which are not. In Louisiana the equivalent subdivisions are called parishes. There are a few cities that are independent of county organizations, namely, Baltimore, St. Louis, and most of the cities of Virginia. There are also a few cities that are incorporated with one or more counties, namely, San Francisco, Hawaii, New Orleans (coextensive with Orleans Parish), New York (coextensive with four counties), and Philadelphia. There are no counties or other civil divisions, except police precincts, in the District of Columbia, the county organization having been abolished. * In 1850 at the time that the cities of Washington and Georgetown were in existence as separate corporations. County of continental United States, Hawaii has no county organization, and in Porto Rico the cities and towns are used as equivalents of counties.

In turn are generally divided into smaller political units which bear different names in the different states and territories such as townships, towns, election precincts, wards, incorporated districts, etc. In the states organized from the public domain and surveyed under the national land system, what is termed the township system is generally the basis of organization of minor civil divisions. In New England, and in a portion of the country strongly affected by New England migration, the counties are generally divided into towns which often have many of the powers that in the South, and in the newly settled West belong to the county. In some states different designations are used for the civil divisions of different counties. Thus some counties in Nebraska and Nevada are divided into townships, while other counties in the same states are divided into election precincts. In Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota townships, election precincts, and school districts appear as civil divisions of different counties. Some counties in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont report, in addition to towns and cities, which are the regular minor civil divisions of those states, a certain number of plantations, parishes, granges, villages, parishes, townships, and wards. These designations generally represent partly organized or unorganized territory held off by the state authorities for different purposes. Federal reservations often occupy parts of several counties and are reported in each, none being made of the fact that the county contains only part of the reservation.

Minor civil divisions which cut across the county or geographic tract are termed primary divisions. Frequently these primary divisions contain political units of still smaller area, such as incorporated villages or boroughs; these smaller political units are referred to as secondary divisions.

Prepared under the supervision of WM. C. HUNT, Chief Statistician for Population

This bulletin gives the population of states and territories, by counties and minor civil divisions, as enumerated at the Thirteenth Census, taken as of April 15, 1910, with comparative statements of population for 1900 and 1890 where possible. In many of the states, and particularly in those of the western part of the country, there have been in the last 20 years a number of changes in the boundaries of counties as well as in the minor civil divisions which oftentimes make a comparison with the preceding census enumeration out of the question.

The statistics are here given in two general tables for each state of continental United States and for the outlying territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico. The statistics for any given state or territory are thus brought together in one place.

Table 1 shows the population of each state or territory, distributed according to counties and minor civil divisions, at the last three Federal censuses, namely, those of 1910, 1900, and 1890. The arrangement of counties is alphabetical and the same order is followed for primary divisions, except where they are known by numbers only, in which case the numerical order is followed. The changes in boundaries, name, or form of organization which have taken place since 1900 are indicated in the footnotes to the table.

Table 2 shows for each state or territory the cities and other incorporated places alphabetically arranged by population, 1910, 1900, and 1890. The cities and places of continental United States are, in general, divided into political divisions known as counties, but in Louisiana the equivalent subdivisions are called parishes. There are a few cities that are independent of county organizations, namely, Baltimore, St. Louis, and most of the cities of Virginia. There are also a few cities that are coextensive with one or more counties, namely, San Francisco, Denver, New Orleans (coextensive with Orleans Parish), New York (coextensive with four counties), and Philadelphia. There are no counties or other civil divisions, except police precincts, in the District of Columbia, the county organization having been abolished in 1874 at the time that the cities of Washington and Georgetown ceased to exist as separate corporations. Outside of continental United States, Hawaii has a county organization, while in Alaska judicial districts and in Porto Rico municipal districts are used as equivalents of counties.

The counties in turn are generally divided into smaller political units which bear different designations in different states and territories, such as townships, towns, election precincts, beats, magisterial districts, etc. In the states organized from the public domain and surveyed under the national land system, what is termed the congressional township has generally been taken as the basis of organization of minor civil divisions. In New England, and in a portion of the country strongly affected by New England migration, the counties are generally divided into towns which often have many of the powers that in the South and in the newly settled West pertain to the county. In some states different designations are used for the civil divisions of different counties; thus some counties in Nebraska and Nevada are divided into townships, while other counties in the same states are divided into election precincts; in Montana, North Dakota, and South Dakota townships, election precincts, and school districts appear as civil divisions of different counties. Some counties in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont report, in addition to towns and cities, which are the regular minor civil divisions in these states, a certain number of plantations, gores, grants, surpluses, purchases, locations, and islands; these designations generally represent partly organized or unorganized territory laid off by the state authorities for different purposes. Federal reservations often occupy parts of several counties and are reported in each, note being made of the fact that the county contains only part of the reservation.

Minor civil divisions which rank next to the county as geographic areas are termed primary divisions; frequently these primary divisions contain political units of still smaller area, such as incorporated villages or boroughs; these smaller political units are referred to as secondary divisions.

The wide variety of nomenclature which exists throughout the states is shown in the following summary, which gives for each state the name of the primary divisions of less area than the county:

STATES.

Alabama.....	Election precincts.
Arizona.....	Election precincts.
Arkansas.....	Townships.
California.....	Judicial townships.
Colorado.....	Election precincts.

Wyoming.....	Election districts and election precincts.

OUTLYING TERRITORIES.

Alaska.....	Recorders' districts.
Hawaii.....	Election districts.
Porto Rico.....	Barrios.

Municipalities, such as cities, towns, and villages, appear in some cases as primary divisions coordinate with townships or election precincts; in other cases as secondary divisions forming parts of a primary division or sometimes coextensive with one or more of them. The usual subdivision of the municipal corporation is the ward, but in a number of cities the ward division has been abandoned, and the city is subdivided into assembly districts; in such cases this division has been used for the presentation of the population.
